

minute and half. The way in which popcorn pops can be expressed mathematically and graphically as a standard normal distribution, also called a bell-shaped curve.

The standard normal distribution is extensively used to represent the random characteristics of a large group over a range of values. For example, the height of all American 7th graders can be expressed as a standard normal distribution.